Montana Community Foundation Announces Amy Sullivan as Director of the Montana Office of Gift Planning

Helena, Mont., (July 29, 2014) – The Montana Community Foundation (MCF) is pleased to announce Amy Sullivan has joined MCF as Director of the Montana Office of Gift Planning. Her responsibilities include leading gift planning efforts on behalf of MCF in support of the many charitable organizations serving Montana. Amy will work as convener, educator, development officer and gift planning expert in support of Montana philanthropy.

“Our wonderful team of professionals here at the Montana Community Foundation continues to grow,” said Mary Rutherford, MCF Chief Executive Officer. “Amy brings incredible experience, strong motivation and true enthusiasm to this position. We are fortunate to have her join us and Montana is fortunate to have her leading our efforts to develop support for the nonprofits and worthy causes in our communities.”

Prior to MCF, Amy served as the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Montana History Foundation, a private nonprofit for public benefit whose mission is to save, preserve and protect Montana’s historic resources.

Before this, she ran her own association management and government affairs business. While serving her clients, she also managed a multimillion dollar federal voting rights project called the Help America Vote Act.

A Montana native, Amy started her career in journalism in Chicago, Illinois and Great Falls, before spending eight years working for publicly elected officials including two governors, a congressman and a United States senator. Her educational background is in journalism with a bachelor’s and master’s degree from Northwestern University’s Medill School of Journalism.

Amy and her husband Michael have two children, Maggie, 19, and Jonathan, 13. They make their home in Helena.
